

Internet Gaming: The New Tobacco Industry!

Join us for a free parent education opportunity!

Tuesday, January 23rd from 6:30-8:30 p.m.

*Mt. Carmel High School Theatre
9550 Carmel Mountain Rd.*

"This problem is poised to get much worse. More and more online computer games are designed to profit by hooking addicts -- starting at a young age -- on their products, just as cigarette makers profited for decades by hooking young nicotine addicts for a lifetime. This Christmas, children being groomed by game-makers will find "Halo" and "World of Warcraft"-themed Lego sets under the tree. At a 2010 conference, one industry executive admitted that "we have to bring them in and keep them addicted and make them keep playing."
